

NASD Panel Awards Exxon Workers $22 Million

A group of retired, largely blue-collar Exxon Mobil Corp. employees who claim their broker dumped them into risky investments have been awarded $22 million, including almost $3.5 million in punitive damages, one of the largest awards of its kind ever levied against a Wall Street firm.

The award against Ameriprise Financial Inc. subsidiary Securities America Inc. was handed down Monday by a three-person National Association of Securities Dealers arbitration panel. It centers on the firm's selling of two controversial investments: variable annuities and mutual fund B-shares, both of which have been the subject of recent enforcement actions. Class B shares are broker-sold shares that don't carry a front-end sales charge but do carry higher annual fees than other fund shares.

(A new report says brokerage firms may have overreacted in limiting B-share sales as a result of the scrutiny. See Fund Track.)

In recent years Ameriprise has come under fire from regulators for some of its sale practices in these areas, and the NASD is investigating this most recent case, according to people familiar with the matter. At least two Securities America staffers, including the broker involved in the case, have been notified they may face civil charges.

The award is one of only a handful of customer-related complaints to top the $20 million mark, according to the Securities Arbitration Commentator, a newsletter that tracks awards. The $22 million award includes $11.6 million in compensatory damages, $3.5 million in punitive damages, $4.7 million in attorney's fees, interest currently totaling $1.8 million and another $453,000 in costs.

yesterday: "We feel very strongly the decision was wrongfully decided, and we intend to file a motion to vacate." David McFadden, the Securities America broker involved in the case, said: "I disagree and am disappointed with the award."

The Exxon award involves the advice 32 former Exxon employees, most of whom live in the Baton Rouge, La., area, received from Securities America and Mr. McFadden, who specializes in providing advice to employees of the oil giant. Many of the employees, including three pipe fitters, had worked at Exxon for most of their careers.

"These were a bunch of good, hard-working people who put their trust in McFadden, and he betrayed that, and, as a result, much of their retirement savings, and many have had to return to work, some greeters and one who now stocks vending machines for a living," said the group's lawyer, Mr. Peiffer, who is based in New Orleans.

Mr. McFadden, according to the group's joint statement of claim against Securities America, advised all the employees to retire and told them "they would be able to live a life that is equal or superior to the one they had while working." He told some of the Exxon employees that they were going "to need to learn how to spend money."

He promised them impressive returns and put their retirement savings primarily in variable annuities and mutual-fund B shares, according to the statement of claim. How he disclosed the high fees that would flow to him and the firm, according to the claim, is another matter. These products he put his interest in his own income ahead of his clients' interests, Mr. Peiffer says.

Variable annuities and B shares are appropriate for some investors. Variable annuities for instance, allow investors to defer taxes on their money. But the Exxon employees' money already was tax deferred so they didn't benefit from this, with the costs associated with the annuities, according to Mr. Peiffer. As for the B shares, Mr. Peiffer says Mr. McFadden didn't disclose the fees.

The losses incurred by the Exxon employees were substantial in some instances. For example, 63-year-old Wayland Adams, a machinist supervisor, the $992,208 investment Mr. McFadden made in 1998 was worth $302,265 by May 2003. Mr. McFadden made a profit of $66,679 on Mr. Adams' investment, in this case a variable annuity, according to the arbitration panel.

The arbitration panel awarded Mr. Adams $629,740.32 in damages and another $22 million to the other 32 employees.

Securities America was purchased by Ameriprise in 1998, and its brokers operate like independent business people.

Ameriprise yesterday, in a regulatory filing, said the award, if upheld, will not have a material impact on its earnings.
